Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For five years, I was a great sufferer from a most persistent blood disease, none of the various medicines I took being of any help whatever. Hoping that change of climate would benefit me, I went to Cuba, to Florida, and then to Saratoga Springs, where I remained some time drinking the waters. But all was no use. At last, being advised by several friends to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, I began taking it, and very soon favorable results were manifested. To-day I consider myself a perfectly healthy man, with a good appetite and not the least trace of my former complaint. To all my friends, and especially young men like myself, I recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla, if in need of a perfectly reliable blood-purifier."—J. A. ## A Medical Firm Gives Away Cash.

J. F. Smith & Co. of No. 255 Greenwich St., New York, the manufacturers of that favorite cathartic known as Smith's Blue Beans, have adopted a novel plan. They ask the individual buyers of Blue Beans to send their full name and address, with an outside wrapper from a bottle of Blue Beans (either size) to their office, and they give $5 for the first wrapper received in each morning's mail, and $1 for the 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th and 6th. Every day
$10 in cash is thus sent to their correspondents. Ask for SMALL size.

THE TRANSACTION DAZED HIM.

How a Liveryman Lost His Carriage Fees

For Three Days' Hire.

Some weeks ago a stranger appeared in the city and wanted to hire a horse and buggy for a few days. The stranger kicked at the amount of security wanted by the liveryman, and finally said he would buy the team if the liveryman would give him an agreement to buy the team back at the end of three days for the same amount. This struck the liveryman as a safe way to guard against any possible horse thief, and he readily wrote out the agreement.

The stranger paid over $200, the amount agreed upon, and for three days had a good time with the team. When the time expired, the stranger carried the team back and was paid his $200.

The liveryman then presented the stranger with a bill for $9 for three days' hire. The stranger refused to pay the bill on the ground that the team belonged to him during the three days, and certainly the liveryman could not charge him for something that did not belong to him. The liveryman was dazed by the transaction as it then appeared, and the stranger left.

A few hours later he was about to board a train when he was placed under arrest by a warrant sworn out before a magistrate by the liveryman, who had recovered from his astonishment enough to see that he had lost his $9. The case went to trial, but the circumstances went to show that during the time the team was charged for it belonged to the stranger, and the case was dismissed.

Then it was the stranger's turn, and he threatened to sue for damages, alleging that his business had been interfered with and that he had been deprived of his liberty on a charge that had no foundation. The liveryman suggested a compromise and paid the expenses as well as the board bill.

Then the stranger, elated with his success at having driven so shrewd a bargain, set up a champagne supper, at which the liveryman forgot all about his loss.—Macon News.

Tooth Crowns.

Not a tooth is lost now where there used to be 100. If only the root is left, a new upper part of porcelain or gold, called a "crown," is fastened upon it so as to be quite serviceable. Supposing that not even the root is left, a gap in the mouth is filled in with one or more "dummies," securely fastened by a gold "bridge" or otherwise to the sound teeth. Complete sets of false teeth are rare nowadays.

The demand for "tooth crowns" comes largely from baseball players, football athletes and bicycle riders, who are very apt to have their teeth broken off short. But the last and most ingenious resort of the dental surgeon is "implantation"—i. e., the setting of new teeth into the jaw. For this purpose real teeth are employed, and not artificial ones. Cocaine having been first employed for producing local anesthesia, a hole is drilled in the jawbone, and into this socket a good tooth, newly drawn from somebody's jaw, is set. If the patient is young and vigorous, the osseous structure soon closes around it, and by the time the gum is healed the tooth is ready for use. It should last for from three to ten years. In the case of an elderly or feeble person it may be fastened in place by silver wires passing around the jawbone.—Providence Journal.

Ripening Cheeses.

The process of ripening or fermenting several varieties of foreign cheese is regarded as an art so difficult as to be almost a trade secret. One importing firm in Philadelphia employs a man whose sole occupation is the ripening of cheese. The process is said to depend chiefly upon the slow application of moderate heat. A temperature above or below a certain point arrests fermentation and renders the cheese dry and worthless. Roquefort is fermented in a famous cavern and requires no ripening after its arrival here. Neufchatel and Limburger exact constant attention on the part of the dealer. A taste for the last named is often acquired by beginning with brie in its minor stages of fermentation. In its last stage it is still mildly pungent as compared with Limburger—a taste for which, once acquired, makes all other varieties seem insipid.—Philadelphia Record.

Bonleavards of Napoleon III.

When Napoleon III undertook to build a boulevard, he did not simply cut a street through narrow blocks. He had sense enough to see that by doing so, under the limitations presented by existing streets, he would get triangles too small for building purposes and a rear view of most of the houses through whose back yards the boulevard should be cut. Not desiring to have a grand avenue lined with back fences, he reconstructed the whole neighborhood, laid out his boulevard so that it would have available building sites on either side and wiped out of existence such cross streets as would have cut the boulevard into small parcels. He had no objection to triangles or trap-ezoids as such, but he did object to triangles and trapezoids too small to serve as a site for anything but a fruit stand.—Philadelphia Ledger.

MULES ON SHIPBOARD.

They Have No Love For Ocean Life, and

Sailors Don't Like Them.

An able seaman and a mule do not as a usual thing get along very well together, and there is generally kicking above and below decks when a crew is shipped on a vessel upon whose manifest these stubborn beasts are enumerated in a bold, round hand.

"Salt water doesn't agree with a mule any more than fresh water agrees with a sailor," declared a coast seaman of experience. "As you are aware, the mule objects to going on board of a ship from the very start and usually requires a derrick and half a dozen men to coerce him. But there is one thing very strange in connection with a mule. I've never known of a vessel being boarded by a high sea so long as a deckload of mules was on her."

"How does a mule act at sea?"

"Well, that is a hard question to answer. Every mule has a different manner of conducting himself during an ocean voyage. Naturally enough, a mule doesn't know the difference between a southwest gale and the trade winds. He is just as liable to raise a disturbance when the ship is in a dead calm as he is to remain as docile as a chunk of pork in a cask when all hands are thinking about taking to the lifeboats.

"If you feed a mule too much at sea, he is apt to get gay. And then it is that the fo'castle hands begin to growl. Clattering hoofs and the braying of a dozen asses do not improve a sailor's temper, and usually the mules have to be placed on short rations.

"When a ship rides heavily and plunges, it is funny to see the jacks try to stand with their heads toward the bow and their tails toward the stern. In this way they can play candlestick with the vessel for a sea-saw.

"One time I shipped in a vessel that had a load of mules on board. We met with misfortune on our outbound trip. There was a young sailor on board named Morris, who wasn't much of a seaman. One dark night when Morris was taking a trick at the wheel a mule got away from the deck corral in some unaccountable manner and started off on a tour of investigation.

"Morris was watching the bulging canvas overhead and dreaming of home. His thoughts were far away from the howling of the wind and the swishing of waters alongside. Suddenly two long ears approached, pointing toward his face, and two blinking bright eyes looked into his own. Then from an invisible source came a sound that would have waked the dead. Morris dropped the wheel and went over the rail like a sinker. We never saw him again.

"The ship broached to and fell into the trough of the sea. The officer on watch rushed to the wheel, and when he got there discovered the mule that had got loose looking knowingly into the binnacle."—San Francisco Call.

A Terrible Encounter.

They had a falling out, the two young men in the loud clothing and this was the way the trouble terminated, while a number of horrified persons looked on.

"You're a chump!"
"Did you say I was a chump?"
"That's what I said."
"Oh, you did, did you?"
"That's what I did."
"Well, you better not say it again, that's all."

"I guess I'll say it again if I feel like it."

"Oh, you will, will you?"
"You bet I will."

"Well, you better not, that's all."
"Why hadn't I better?"
"That's all right. You'll find out quick enough."

Right here friends intervened, and both young men received congratulations on having survived the encounter without injury.—Chicago Record.

Not a Fool Husband.

Under some circumstances assurance is an excellent quality to have and to hold. Not long ago a young couple entered a railroad car who were immediately put down as a bride and groom. But they were remarkably self possessed and acted just like old folks, so that the other passengers began to doubt it after all.

As the train moved out, however, the young man rose to remove his overcoat and a shower of rice fell out, while the passengers smiled broadly. But even that did not affect the youth, who also smiled, and turning to his partner remarked audibly, "By Jove, May, I've stolen the groom's overcoat!"—Philadelphia Times.

"Waltz or Schottische?"

It has no doubt often occurred to you while walking on the street that you have met a pedestrian going in the opposite direction, and attempting to pass you bob from one side to the other. The result is dodging two or three times from one side to the other before either gets by. The other day a young man well known in Mandan society met with that experience, and a gay young colored girl was the pedestrian coming in the opposite direction. After two or three dodges each way in his endeavor to pass, the girl exclaimed: "Fo' de Lawd's sake, honey, what is dis a-gwan to be—a waltz or a schottische?"—Mandan Times.

MESSAGE IN PNEUMONIA.

An Important Medical Discovery, Is the Opinion of a Physician.

A regular practitioner of Natchez, Miss., has contributed a paper to the New York Medical Record, in which he makes clear the decided benefits to be derived from "manipulation" in cases of severe coughs, even in cases severe enough to assume the dreaded form of pneumonia. The doctor who contributes the paper does not employ the terms the public would employ under similar circumstances in describing the treatment. Possibly a dread of the censure of his professional brethren deters him from the use of a term employed by men who do not recognize the code of ethics which the Natchez doctor performs recognizes. "Manipulation" is the word Dr. Metcalfe of Natchez uses. "Massage" is the word any newspaper writer would employ, and by it the public would better understand what was meant.

Dr. Metcalfe speaks of the treatment after 25 years of laborious observations. He says: "I have reached a point where I do not dread as formerly to encounter a case of pneumonia, nor does a hacking cough in a consumptive patient alarm me. An asthmatic struggling for breath and the patient with bronchitis that keeps one awake all night do not deter me from promising relief in half an hour, so that the former can lie down to rest, and the latter pass the day and night without any distressing cough."

The writer of the paper insists that much of a cough with its attendant evils is external rather than internal—i. e., the exciting cause is in the muscular surroundings of the bronchial tubes and lungs rather than in the tubes and lungs. In an experience running through 25 years he had found that the promptest way to diagnose a case of pneumonia and to enable the sufferer to throw off the poisonous mucus clogging the lung cells was by the manipulation of those parts affected, the muscular parts about the lungs. The relief of coughs that seem confined to the throat had also been effected in the same way. As proof of the truth of his position Dr. Metcalfe cites several cases of cure under his personal supervision where not a drop of medicine had been employed. Some of the pneumonia cases he had witnessed had been experienced by men more than 80 years old, and recovery had been brought about by manipulation.

The method of manipulation, he says, is simple. It consists of a firm pressure upon the painful part of the chest by the tips of the fingers, the latter being at the same time made to move the skin in a circular direction within the area of the pressure. The doctor says that in pneumonia he generally perseveres with this manipulation until expectoration takes place. The information thus contributed ought to prove valuable, if remembered and an application made of it promptly, in cases where physicians are remote, where life is staked on prompt action. Even the laity, under such circumstances, might be able to save life.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Paderewski.

Paderewski says of himself: "When I am to appear in public, I keep perfectly quiet during the preceding hours. I practice calisthenics immediately after rising every day. I eat with great appetite and am not in the least a difficult man to cater for. When my recitals are over, I feel that a weight has been lifted off my mind, and then I love to join in any amount of fun. I practice at all hours of the day and night, sometimes all night, for I have no set rules for working. I am never by any chance without a piano and very often practice between the courses at meals or while I am dressing. I suffer from insomnia consequent to the great strain on my nerves, and although it is not noticeable to the general public I am a martyr to nervousness. I go through positive tortures when I contemplate playing. I have schooled myself to absolutely subdue my feelings, or they would rise to such a pitch as to prevent my having the least control over my fingers."

He Was No Dentist.

There is a well known little town in Monmouth county, N. J., which contains a Gold street. Few knew of the street until recently, when one of the local newspapers called attention to it by asking where its denizens were to vote.

Gold street has but one inhabitant, an old man who has his house and little shop there. He read that query of the local editor, studied it a day or two and then visited the office of the opposition paper.

"It ain't right," he said, "and I wouldn't have thought Dan Applegate would have done it. He's known me all his life. He knows I'm poor and ignorant, but I ain't no demagogue, and he knows it, and I want you to say so."—New York Sun.

The Dude's Presence of Mind.

"How did Algy get so frightfully burned?"

"He was warming before the grate, just after a bath, when his clothes caught fire."

"Didn't he jump back into the bathtub?"

"No. He ran out on the fire escape."—Life.
